LETTERS PATENT · IRISH CLAN Ó COMÁIN

TO ALL AND SUNDRY WHOM THESE PRESENTS DO OR MAY CONCERN

We Taoiseach Fearghas Ó Comáin, The Commane, custodian of Killone Abbey and the Holy Well of St John the Baptist, of Newhall Estate in the County of Clare — and also XXVI Baron of Kinfauns and Hereditary Admiral of the Water of Tay — Chief of Ó Comáin, send Greeting.

Whereas it hath been represented to Us, by the recommendation of Our Privy Council and the Office of the Private Secretary, that Antoin Commane, by act of welcome and allegiance to the clan, hath brought one soul unto the Register at Newhall — and whereas the labour of bringing-others-in is held by Us as a particular grace, deserving of recognition in the keeping of the clan — it hath pleased Us to raise the said member within the clan to the dignity hereunder:

IN HONOUR NOW CONFERRED

Antoin Commane,
Cara of Ó Comáin

Cara · /KAR-uh/ · Friend

Cara is the older Irish word for a friend — and in the Brehon-law tradition, the Chief's cairde were the trusted kin-allies who carried his interests outward into the wider world. In raising the bearer to this dignity, We name them exactly that — a member through whom the clan reaches another.

By Our command, the Privy Council, the Office of the Private Secretary, and the kindred of Ó Comáin, both within and without the boundaries of the clan's historic seat at Newhall, do acknowledge and address the bearer henceforth as Antoin Commane, Cara of Ó Comáin.

Given under Our hand and seal at the seat of Ó Comáin, this third day of May, in the year of Our Lord two thousand and twenty-six.
